The aim of the Journal of Literary Semantics (JLS) is to concentrate the endeavors of theoretical linguistics upon those texts traditionally classed as 'literary,' in the belief that such texts are a central, not a peripheral, concern of linguistics. This journal, founded by Trevor Eaton in 1972 and edited by him for thirty years, has pioneered and encouraged research into the relations between linguistics and literature. It is widely read by theoretical and applied linguists, narratologists, poeticians, philosophers, and psycholinguists. JLS publishes articles on all aspects of literary semantics. The ambit is inclusive rather than doctrinaire. The journal publishes articles of a philosophical or theoretical nature that attempt to advance our understanding of the structures, dynamics, and significations of literary texts. This includes articles that relate the study of literature to other disciplines such as psychology, neurophysiology, mathematics, and history, as well as articles dealing with the educational problems inherent in the study of literature.

"The Journal of Literary Semantics is an important contribution to discussions in the area of semiotics, linguistic approaches to literature, and theoretical analyses of literary texts from a variety of formal perspectives. It fills a gap in the arena of interdisciplinary research in the wake of structuralist approaches to literary language."
